CCTV: During his visit to Japan, Chinese State Councilor and Foreign Minister Wang Yi announced together with his Japanese counterpart that the two countries will launch shortly a "fast track" for personnel exchange. Could you give us more details on this?

Zhao Lijian: Through friendly consultation, the Chinese government and the Japanese government have reached consensus on establishing a "fast track" to facilitate essential travel including for business purposes on the basis of strict epidemic prevention and control. The two foreign ministers affirmed this yesterday and jointly announced the news. This is a positive step taken by the two countries to promote bilateral personnel exchange and support resumption of work and production amid an ongoing battle against COVID-19. As agreed by the two sides after consultation, the "fast track" will be officially launched on November 30.

AFP: The UK will pass a new law today that bans Huawei from its 5G mobile network and telecom companies who continue to use Huawei equipment past the deadline could be heavily fined. What's China's comment? Secondly, India has banned a further 43 Chinese apps on national security grounds. What's your comment?

Zhao Lijian: On your first question, without any concrete evidence, the United Kingdom, in collaboration with the United States, has been discriminating and suppressing Chinese companies citing nonexistent "security risks". It blatantly violates the principles of market economy and free trade rules, severely undermines the interests of Chinese companies, and continually erodes mutual trust with China, which is the basis for bilateral cooperation. In light of this, significant concerns have been raised over the openness and fairness of the British market as well as the security of foreign investment in the United Kingdom.

On your second question, China expresses serious concerns over India's claim. The spokesperson of the Chinese Embassy in India has issued a statement in response. For four times since June, India has imposed restrictions on smartphone apps with Chinese backgrounds under the pretext of national security. These moves in glaring violation of market principles and WTO rules severely harm the legitimate rights and interests of Chinese companies. China firmly rejects them.
